WHAT ABOUT THE CURRICULUM?

The Chief of Naval Education and Training prescribes the courses for naval science for NJROTC units that comprise the three or four year curriculum.

WHAT SUBJECTS ARE INCLUDED IN THE CURRICULUM?

Naval Science I, II, III & IV

These courses instill in students the meaning of citizenship, the elements of leadership, and the value of scholarship in attaining life goals. The cadet attains a deeper awareness of the vital importance of the world oceans to the well-being of the United States. Broadening the student's understanding of the operative principles of military leadership, the concept and significance of teamwork. The intrinsic value of good order and discipline in the accomplishment of objectives, the fundamentals of American democracy, and to expand their understanding of naval academic subjects are focused areas of this curriculum. At the most experienced level, the focus is on improving leadership skills through practical situations, and then helping the student analyze the reasons for their varying degrees of success.

Leadership, Drill & Ceremony

The Leadership, Drill and Ceremonies Courses are available at the academic and honors level. These courses focus on teaching the cadets' leadership, though practical application and study of leadership scenarios and famous leaders. Cadets in the honors course will take lead roles in ceremonies throughout the semester for the Annual Military Inspection, Veteran's Day Ceremony and several parades. Cadets will also spend many class sessions in drill and ceremonies practice to learn how to perform all the drills and use the ceremonial equipment.

COMMITMENT

CADETS MAKE AN IMPACT.

While it takes a dedicated group of go-getters to make the unit the award-winning program that it is, most cadets find time to contribute their talents to other organizations as well. NJROTC Cadets are actively involved in many different activities such as church and civic groups, student government, band, and athletic teams such as football, basketball, baseball, and wrestling.

Proper time management, the ability to prioritize, demonstrating leadership, and enthusiasm make our cadets very special members of the student body and our community.
